Worthless-He Confesses to Bigamy in Court.

NEW YORK, January 10.—Declaring that he was utterly ignorant of the laws relating to marriage and blasmy, William E. Blauvelt pleaded guilty to having two wives, in the County Court of Brooklyn yesterday. According to his remarkable story, he voluntarily surrendered his first wife to another man because he loved her so much that he would not stand in the way of her happiness, and she, he declared, acted as a bridesmald at the ceremony that united him to his second choice for a helpmate.

The innocent victim of this arrangement is Miss Florence E. Fitzgerald, who, with

"I feel as if I would go crazy." she said, "when I realize what he has done and the way that he has deceived me. Such a man should be punished."

In April, 1006, Blauvelt wedded Sarah A Smith at her home in Rockville Centre, L. I. A year later they separated, after he gave her a paper which he imagined represented a divorce. He then assisted her in carrying out her wish to become Mrs. Grover C. Cammer on March 8, 1996. On May 10th of the same year he married Miss Fitzgerald, and wife No. 1 was bridesmald, while her new husband was best man.

There the four led a happy existence until the mother of No. 2 began to ask questions. This had the effect of causing Blauvelt to desert his new wife. Blauvelt will be sentenced on Monday.

Man Made in the Image of God. Genesis is essentially pictorial. It is a radiant panorama. For the end intended, cenesis is essentially piccolar. It is radiant panorama. For the end latended, its scenic method could not have been surpassed. The motive of the book is to reveal the reality, personality and power of God: to show the material universe as an expression of His mind and a creation of His will; to make plain to him, man's own constitution and his relation to nature and to God. For the purpose to be conserved the form is singularly effective. When all is said and done by way of criticism, the book will still command respect. Theories concerning authorship and inspiration may be altered or discarded, but Genesis will never lose its hold upon the universal human heart.

The most remarkable content of the

The most remarkable content of the book is the thought of God in the creation of man. The radiant enunciation of this is the rarest jewel in this casket of gems. It is of practical and priceless value. With dramatic vividness the Father of the World is pictured as coming to a halt in His creative work. In value. With dramatic vividness the Father of the World is pictured as coming to a halt in His creative work. In the last of the great and long epochs, He pauses as if to separate and give special distinction to what He is now about to do. The fact that it is the last in order indicates that it is pre-eminent and climactical. The change in the creative formula is also significant. The "let be" used seven times is now changed to "let us make"—it is the "plural of majesty." It is as if God is solemnly announcing to Himself His intention of creating a vicar who shall visibly represent Himself upon the earth. A being is now to be made who shall be like God. One with whom he can commune at pleasure, and one who by his intelligence and will shall bring everything, animate and inanimate, to fits best estate. It pleases Him to create man in a dualism: male and female creates He them. He ordains their multiplication and commissions them to "have dominion." With the solicitude multiplication and commissions them to "have dominion." With the solicitude of a father He indicates the kind, quality, of a father He indicates the kind, quality, and abundance of food prepared for them. And now for the seventh time God spreads His hands in benediction over all His works. In the seventh epoch there is cessation from creative work, and God Himself gives an object lesson and example of respite from toll.

Identification Marks on Man's Body Obliterated by Fire. NEW YORK, January 10.—Fire was used to destroy the features and prevent the identification of the body of a man found in the woods opposite the old Guttenburg race-track, in North Bergen, yesterday. The man is believed to have been murdered, partly burned and then carried to the spot where the body was found.

F. W. Toetsle, a member of a gypsy tribe which is camped at the race-track, discovered the body. The indications seemed to be that a fire was built upon the breast and another on and around the head and face. There was a strong odor of kerosene oil, and near the body lay a new can with a little oil in it. A big wallet, in which there was $1.07, was found beside the body, and also a silver watch and chain. An investigation is being made.

THE FUTURE AMERICA.

She Will Tower Over the Nations 20 Years from Now.

tions 20 Years from Now.

The new Bank of England is America!

If we propose to build a railway we have to go to the United States for the necessary capital. If we wish to develop some industrial concern we assistance. If we have to sell a large of property, a valuable picture, a rare work of art or a celebrated race-horse we offer it to an American millionaire. If any well-known bachelor among us is in pecuniary difficulties it is to the United States that he hurries to find a bride with a fortune. If a more obscure Englishman is unable to earn a living in this country it is to the United States that he perseally crosses to obtain employment!

It is probable that at the very least America will have twice as much wealth and power in twenty years hence as sie has acquired in the past twenty years. If so, what country will then be her equal? "The future of the United States" would be a useful subject for some essay writer to deal with, for an America that is twice as rich, as powerful and as populous; that has double the fleet of men-of-war and merchantmen and that does double the trade with the outside world that the America of to-day has and does will be a monster among the nations.

All that precedes in this story of creation is preparatory to man. Separation of light and darkness, waters above and beneath, creation of sun and moon, of life animal and vegetable, all is an orderly approach to man as the crown of all,

This is assurance of the dignity of man's station and the worth of his be-ing. It is his coronation at the hand of his Creator.

What constitutes man's likeness to God? It cannot be anything in physical nature, for God is Spirit without body. The likeness inheres in man's moral and intellectual faculties. He thinks, wills, loves. This power, not shared by any other creature, makes him to "lack little of being God."

pany. . "Likeness and limage" is simply rhe-torical. It has not two different mean-ings but duplication of the same mean-ing for emphasis.

Man's dominion over nature was never so great as at the present day. With re-tort, spectrum and telescope he is wrest-ing nature's secrets from her and sub-duing her forces to his use. The universe affords a limitless arena for man's skill and prowess.

We have to talk of God as if He were a man. Such is the limitation of language. So the narrative speaks of God as resting, although He can never be weary. His rest was exemplary.

The discovery of the Divine within, daily loyalty to Him in the deliberate choice of the good, absorbing admiration and love of Him for what He is, personal communion and fellowship with Him—these will create and maintain a likeness to God. It is an inherent and irreversible law of being that every man is according to his ideal. High ideal, high character. Low ideal, low character. The Divine furnishes the superlatively high ideal. Loyalty to the Divine is the essence of religion. ed, while for substance book is re-tained.
